G 13a

Nobody should be forced to join the military. Most adult men and ~~women~~^{women} have families to take care of, jobs to maintain and military service should be a personal choice. Being required to join the military could hurt a lot of families.

First of all there is a chance that once someone is sent into war ~~overthere~~, there's a chance they are not coming back. That means that there are going to be a lot of young children who grow up not knowing both of their parents. That would be devastating to these young children and they may not do as well in life or live up to ~~their~~^{their} full potential because their mom or dad were forced to enlist in the military against their will.

Secondly people do have jobs. There are bills to pay, families to feed and none of these can be accomplished as easily, if the person who is suppose to be doing this is in a war getting shot at. There are certain jobs that need to be done, and who suppose to do these jobs if the government is requiring men and women to enlist in the military.

Lastly, joining the military should be a personal choice. Besides, and if the President wouldn't rage war on every little country in the war, the U.S. wouldn't need more people to join the military. If the U.S. needed more people, people on death row or illegal immigrants should be the first to go. The U.S. shouldn't send young or old adults to the military who are try to start their lives or just live peacefully.

Sending Forcing men and women to join the military is a bad choice. People have family and job to take care of and joining the military should a personal choice not a requirement.

The government should stop engaging in war every years and fights

Score Point: 4

This response reflects proficiency in persuasive writing skills. The writer clearly states that nobody should be forced to join the military. Key ideas are presented to support this position (adults have families to take care of; jobs to maintain; military service should be a personal choice). The response is adequately organized. Although several errors in writing conventions are present, the writer demonstrates some facility in the use of language (devastating to these young children; live up to their full potential; none of these can be accomplished as easily; wage war on every little country). Further development, stronger illustration of the key ideas, and greater syntactic variety would be required for a higher score.
